

City Pages calls Goff & Howard president “the whiz kid” of state’s Republicans

6-2-08

Goff & Howard’s clients look to our president, Chris Georgacas, for his strategic expertise and vast knowledge of today’s most important public affairs issues. Those of us who work with him marvel at his knowledge of everything from classical languages to Formula 1 racing. Now, courtesy of City Pages, Chris can add Republican “whiz kid” to his list of attributes. City Pages’ most recent edition named Chris among the top ten most powerful Republicans in Minnesota.

Of course people like Governor Tim Pawlenty and Senator Norm Coleman came up, but City Pages was interested in the players who “work in the shadows,” as the publication put it – those who aren’t household names but have shaped the state’s political landscape.

In Chris’s decade with Goff & Howard, he has helped clients enact policy changes and enhance their reputations by designing customized strategies that include the right mix of government relations and public relations efforts. He is also very active in the community and key organizations, serving on the boards of ClearWay Minnesota, the Ordway Center for the Performing Arts, and the St. Paul Police Foundation. He formerly served on the Met Council, was chairman of Governor Pawlenty’s campaign and transition team in 2002, and was the state Republican chairman from 1993-1997. (Not bad for someone who works in “the shadows.”)

Congratulations to Chris – our very own “whiz kid” – on his City Pages recognition.
